

HISTORY
(specialty 07.00.02)

Shuyakova E.N. Russian youth subgroups in social and political view

It is given the analysis of the problems associated with the activities of youth organizations socially and politically orientated as the institutions of civil society in contemporary Russia. It is considered the conditions, which authorize the functioning of youth organizations. It is studied the motivation of young people to unite, analyzed the process of youth organizations. The software requirements of youth organizations and the statements of their leaders are researched. Performance correlation of youth organizations with their elected method of struggle is prevailing. The reasons of the inability of young people, as the post-Soviet Russia, and in modern terms are to consolidate and create a broad youth association. In this regard, it is formulated an alternative development of modern youth organization that promotes folding of the youth to constructive partnership. It gives an objective analysis of the initiatives of the government to reorient the youth community in project activities.

Key words: self-organization of the youth, youth associations, teenagers, social and political activity, project activity.

Rostov state university of economics

March, 24, 2012
