

ECONOMICS
(specialty 08.00.01)

Nikolaeva E.E. Deformation of distributional relations in Russian economy: essence, reasons, expression, consequences

It is shown that distributive relations can be inadequate to economic system and institutional environment in accordance with the reproduction. It is presented the author's definition of deformations of distributive relations as inadequacy to socially normal proportions of reproduction, the institutional environment, and also deviations from norms; their economic and institutional reasons known as judgements in the literature are considered; it is highlighted the territorially-sphered ("center – periphery" of social and economic development of territory of the Russian Federation; "swelling" reference spheres at a reduced share of processing branches of production of goods) and income – price deformations of distributive relations in modern economy of Russia (an inadequate parity of level of a salary and the importance of spheres of economic activities; discrepancy of an actual salary in the most significant (vital) branches of economy to socially normal level; discrepancy of the prices for habitation, incomes and requirement for habitation); their social and economic consequences influencing maintenance of a normal course of expanded reproduction and advance of economy in a direction of innovative development are specified.

Key words: distributive relations, deformations, social and economic reasons, institutional reasons, social and economic consequences.

Ivanovskiy

state university

April, 10, 2012

---