

PHILOSOPHY
(specialty 09.00.11)

Ageeva N.A. Efficiency of therapy cooperation of a doctor and patient in the context of rational and mythological thinking

The man in modern society has not only a lot of rights and freedoms, but also has a lot of existential issues that he has to solve. Regularly exercising the choice of action or inaction, taking responsibility or shifting it to others, thinking rationally or mythologically, man creates his human activities or is a blind follower of an independent person. Consciously or unconsciously, actively – passive a person chooses his own destiny. The concept of informed consent is always the final word that rests with the patient, who decides whether to be treated by skilled professionals in a medical facility or to entrust his health to "healers" who have no medical training or a license for the provision of medical services. In the case of written patient refusal of medical treatment the doctor has no right to impose his treatment. Respecting the rights and dignity of man, the doctor refers to it as the end and not as means to achieve other goals, even if it is the patient's health.

Key words: rational and mythological thinking, therapeutic alliance, selection, informed consent.

Rostov state medical university. Rostov-on-Don, Russia

September, 21, 2013
