

PHILOSOPHY

Ivankov A. V.

(North-Caucasus research center of high school. Southern federal university. Rostov-on-Don city, Russia)

Problems and prospects of Russian political pluralism development

The problems of the Russian political and party pluralism are considered. The origins of the phenomenon of multi-party must be sought not only in materialized nostalgia for the "golden age" at beginning of the century, and trends in self-development of the communist regime, which came out of all modern politics. The cause of many problems of modern Russia is a country that lives as if in different eras and, respectively, in different political cultures. On the one hand, we have not yet "tasted" real multiparty system. But, on the other hand, Russia has resided in the modern era, when playing classical canons of multiparty system ceases to be imperative stay in the "now".

Key words: pluralism, political and legal life, party, political culture, liberalism, civilization desacralization policy of ideology.

March, 21, 2014
