

LINGUISTICS

T.B. Asten

(Southern federal university. Rostov-on-Don, Russia)

Status of “zero” declension in modern Russian language

Non-declension of names of foreign origin is defined not by tradition or norm, but by a variety of factors - morphological, pragmatic, semantic and syntactic. The most indisputable is the influence of morphological bans on declension. At the same time, the influence of pragmatic differences "their" and "foreign" ("usual" and "alien"), the dependence in / non-inclusion in the paradigm of declension and category of the general and category of the private semantics of words is of no doubt. In some cases, the immutability of the characteristic can be determined by syntactic position. Case system in the Russian language, therefore, determines the system of declinations. To identify the correlative links of these concepts there is a need to trace the history of formation, the formation and stabilization of each of them, as well as the dynamics of their semantics. As it is known, to a greater extent the changes in interpretations of particular historical period and the period of the change of linguistic paradigms are associated with the term "case".

Key words: declension, case, norm, non-declension, paradigm.

September, 25, 2014
