Influence of ethical and law views of ancient lawyers in the process of modern lawyer formation

The legal profession requires not only the professional knowledge of the subject, but an understanding of its place in the existing system of social relations. The lawyer has a certain characteristic just for lawyers, a look at the public relations: he should understand each person, first of all, appreciate the man, and only then - to penetrate into the matter of law. This opinion is formed in the process of learning and professional practise by studying law and moral regulations about society. The greatest part of the right belongs to the continental Roman lawyers, called «iuris prudentes» and formed the shape of a professional lawyer in the writings. Study of their experiences, the study of ancient jurisprudence distinguishing morality and law is quite necessary in this profession.

Key words: ethics, law, justice, Roman law, law, pro-professional ethics.
