

SOCIAL STUDY

N.A. Vyalikh

(Southern federal university. Rostov-on-Don, Russia)

Agents and conditions of formation an accessible medical care environment in Russia

The topicality of the article is the necessity to construct an accessible and effectiveness medical care environment in Russia. The novelty of the work is expressed in the indication of contradiction between explicit functions and real interests of agents in the medical care system. A special attention is given to the consequences of government participation reduction in the healthcare. It's argued that, in general, the government interests and consumers' interests in the field of medical support are the same. However society still expects support and care from government, but the government gradually «comes out of the game». Finally the author comes to the conclusion about the possibility of increasing the medical care accessibility by means specification guarantees of free medical care and responsibility of agents, reduction of patients' direct payments, integrating of treatment process, and social dialogue of agents.

Key words: health institute, medical care, medical care accessibility, agents, functions, interests.

April, 29, 2015
