Freedom in the context of key categories of modern philosophical anthropology

It is considered the relation of the concept "freedom" with the key categories of modern philosophic anthropology. It is argued that the classic understanding of the category "freedom" is related with the explication within the dichotomy between "freedom/responsibility". At the same time, adequate and complete philosophic analysis of the nature of the problem of freedom is inconceivable without its consideration in the context of issues of law as procedural, practical implementation of freedom dependent on the nature and practice of legal relations in the modern socio-cultural space. Moreover, freedom is not only a condition, a form of implementation, but the most important substantive and procedural characteristics of the creative personality.

Key words: freedom, philosophical anthropology, creativity, self-actualization, identity, right.
