

PHILOSOPHY

A.A. Shmatko, A.D. Pokhilko, M.A. Gubanova

(Armavir state academy of pedagogy. Armavir, Russia)

Modalities of social transformations

The article focuses on the study of contemporary problems of social transformation that requires a reference to the methodology of civilized approach, in particular, sociological, axiological, anthropological method, historicism. The concept of social transformation in this case extends to the concept of "social and historical transformation". Socio-historical transformation can be interpreted as a historical process of social transformation, which is closely linked to environmental, cultural, economic, political, individual and personal and other components of social change. Modality in the general (logical) sense of the word means substantive content of pure form of more information. Modality is more specific, methodological aspect case content filling forms (species) of one or another social transformation, and at the same time, some deviation of the ideal plan of the modernization process. In this respect, social transformation, not only historical, but also polymodal. Exploring one modality, we can not forget about the others, from the effects of which they are temporarily abstracted in this context.

Key words: social transformation, modality, history, politics, culture, methods of social research methodology.

July, 20, 2015