Functioning of lexical innovations in diverse languages

Nominations caused to life by external, extra-linguistic reasons are most noticeable and numerous. For extralinguistic reasons, changes in the vocabulary of the language include the development of science and technology, the expansion of international contacts, the specialization of professional production activities, changes in economic and political life. The emergence of lexical innovations reflects changes in the infinitely diverse world of things, the social activity of man, the work of human consciousness. The emergence of new nominations as a response to social demand, as a result of pro-progressive mastery of the world is the main driving force of neologization in all languages and at all stages of development.

Key words: lexical innovations, the driving force of neologization, extra-linguistic reasons for changing the vocabulary of the language.
