

PHILOLOGY

Elena S. Gailomazova, Oksana V. Dyshekova

(Don Cossack state institute of food technologies and business; Rostov branch of Russian academy of customs. Rostov-on-Don, Russian Federation)

Peculiarities of use and formation of terms in tourist vocabulary based on borrowings from the English language

The increased interest of linguists in describing the uses of professional communities is due to the fact that this terminology goes far beyond the professional sphere, actively penetrating into the spoken language. Linguistic studies of recent years address the specifics of scientific texts, the structure of terms and the ways in which they are formed. The research of language means in the field of tourism is undertaken already long enough however comparative aspect of nominative processes, despite the obvious applied importance, still is not developed in the necessary degree. Many foreign-language terms were strongly included into an outline of Russian language. Others only try to get accustomed in language, but there are such words which, most likely will not assimilate into the language. It is possible to claim only with confidence that this phenomenon cannot be regulated and it is useless to fight against it as in a result language itself will select necessary lexicon.

Key words: term, tourist sphere, linguistic terminology, professional sphere, nominative process, language assimilation.

---

November 19, 2019