

PEDAGOGY

Elena I. Zritneva, Nadezhda P. Klushina, Yury A. Lobeiko

(North Caucasian Federal University. Stavropol, Russian Federation)

Continuing education in pedagogical activity: theoretical and methodological aspects of research

Problems of education always occupy an important place in the activity of the State, because the moral, intellectual, economic and cultural potential of each society depends most directly on the state of the educational sphere and its development opportunities. Continuing education reflects the growing role of education at all stages of life. Continuing education means a whole range of conscious actions that complement each other and take place both within and outside the education system at different times of life. This activity is focused on the acquisition of knowledge, development of all parties and abilities of the individual, including the ability to learn and preparation for the performance of various social and professional duties.

Key words: educational process, socio-pedagogical concept, system of continuous education, personality, learning society, educational paradigm

February 11, 2020
