Class on FSES: structure and self analysis

The transition to a new federal state educational standard reflected on the structure of the modern lesson, whose main task is the development of cognitive activity, the formation of a holistic view of the knowledge system. In order the classes to be effective, useful for the development of students, the teacher must possess a whole range of methodological skills, among which should be distinguished analytical ability, i.e. the ability to conduct self-analysis of class.

Key words: structure of the modern class, federal state educational standards, self-analysis of the class.
