Pedagogical morality: methodological aspects of research

A person is a collection of social relations. This is an initial axiom that helps to understand the essence of man as a whole, the nature of his individual connections with society. By itself, a person is not connected with all social relations, he can be included only in a limited number of social ties, and, at certain points, can contribute to their creation. Therefore, there may be aspects of public life to which a person has only an indirect relationship. Morality is a special aspect of the life of society. The moral factor in educational activities is the basis of the pedagogical process, which determines compliance with the most important requirements of our time.

Key words: morals, morality, public consciousness, culture, pedagogical ethics, personality.
