

PHILOSOPHY

Yulia A. Petrova, Irina F. Kisel

(Rostov State Economic University, Rostov-on-Don, Russian Federation)

Communication process: coding and decoding of communication

Language is a set of symbols used for communication, helping to express the thoughts or feelings. Your own or native language is a language that a person has learned from his own childhood. Teaching practice shows that young people who are fluent in their native language are better at learning another languages and dialects, especially in English. English is the universal language spoken by millions of people around the world; it has become a leading language and an important language in various fields such as science, education, professional fields, etc. Academic research is currently focusing more on this particular language because it is believed to help students become better. The question of the components of the philosophy of teaching a foreign language (using the example of English) considered in the article will make it possible to formulate one's own philosophy of teaching a foreign language, which, in our opinion, can help in teaching problems.

Key words: foreign language, English, philosophy of education.

March 20, 2021
