

PEDAGOGY

Yulia V. Shvedenko, Stella V. Rusinova, Maria I. Kirillova

(Stavropol state pedagogical institute. Stavropol, Russian Federation)

Educational needs of students with mental retardation in inclusive education

It is stated that the presence of special educational needs in children with a delay in mental development poses the task of creating barrier-free special educational conditions for a modern inclusive general educational institution. In the exemplary adapted basic general education program for students with a delay in mental development, a list of special educational needs is proposed, such as the organization of the educational process, adaptation of the content of educational programs, adaptation of the methods of submitting educational material, overcoming difficulties in the development, socialization and adaptation of this category of students. According to the authors, it is necessary to systematize and supplement modern approaches to the organization of special educational conditions for students with a delay in mental development.

Key words: education process, inclusive education, educational needs, learning, adaptation, socialization.

July 10, 2021
