On the issue of interlanguage comparison of paremiological units

It is analyzed the issues of interlanguage comparison of paremiological units. It is noted that the comparative method is the most rational in the knowledge of languages, it allows to determine the structural, semantic and other features of different languages. When comparing the paremias of different languages, the questions of the presence or absence of interlanguage equivalence are determined. This is due to the fact that each paremia is a complete sentence. It has a certain context, suggesting certain connotations. It is also noted that there may be such relations as identity, structural synonymy or lexical variation, ideographic synonymy, stylistic synonymy and enantiosemy, i.e. intra-word antonymy, between the paremias of different system languages. Synchronous comparison of paremiological units will help to understand the processes of mutual enrichment of languages, identify common features and differences in the lexical composition of languages, which contribute to the illumination of both intra-and inter-linguistic correlations between the paremias of the compared languages, can reflect the results of qualitative and quantitative analysis and the nature of such relations.

Key words: interlanguage comparison, paremiological units, comparative description, linguistic research, context, interlanguage equivalence.
