Realisation of the categorical situations of location in news discourse

The semantic category is the basis of the functional-semantic field of the same name. We distinguish seven types of locative categorical situations based on the field of location, namely: four categorical situations of location itself (in them static nature is most stressed, which determines the invariable spatial location of the object in relation to the localizer), and three categorical situations of movement (in them the crucial factor is dynamism, which determines the movement of an object in space).

Key words: categorical situations, functional-semantic field, location, movement.
