Social self-determination of the younger generation in Russia society: searches, problems, solutions

It is considered the process of social self-determination of the younger generation in the context of the transformation of Russian society. The social environment influences the process of personality formation, however, the young person himself can influence the social environment, introducing various behavioral norms that are inherent in the specific time of residence of the individual himself. The article argues that the professional development of the personality of young people is expressed through their labor self-realization. Disorientation of the life meanings of young people often leads to the loss of life meanings and value orientations. Social self-determination of young people occurs through finding their own "I", understanding life priorities and becoming a personality at a professional level. Labor self-realization is an important meaning of the social adaptation of a young person in the context of the transformation of Russian society.

Key words: social self-determination, youth, self-realization, value orientations, labor self-realization, values, life attitudes, adaptation, professional development.
