Eurasianism in the context of geopolitics and economics

The Eurasian project is considered in the context of modern conditions of geopolitics and economics. It is noted that the Soviet project of a multinational state contained elements of Eurasianism in a modified form associated with ideological, geopolitical and socio-economic circumstances. At the same time, the tendencies of Eurasianism in this context were contradictory and were associated with attempts to defend national sovereignty. At the same time, the article notes that in the conditions of globalization and post-globalization, it is impossible to deny the influence of multi-vector inclusion in the Eurasian space as a condition for independent development in order not to discard the already established forms of nation-building, not to overstep the boundaries of national sovereignty. In this regard, it is difficult to substantiate the Eurasian concept not only in geopolitical, cultural and civilizational terms, but also as a concept of modern pragmatics related to the economic, political and social integration of the participants of the Eurasian project.

Key words: Eurasian space, Eurasian project, Eurasianism, national interests, national sovereignty, policy of statehood.
