Conversion in the Tatar language as a way of word formation

In linguistics, conversion is considered a very productive and regular way of forming new words. In Turkology, conversion is most often called a morphological and syntactic method of word formation, in which there is a regular and irregular transition of a word from one part of speech to another, where each group of words has several types (classifications) of word formation. This article analyzes the relationship of “verb–noun”, “noun–adjective”, “adjective–adverb” in the conversion method of word formation in the Tatar language.

Key words: linguistics, Turkology, Tatar language, word formation, method of word formation, conversion, word transition, types of conversion.
