

PHILOSOPHY

Konstantin I. Korchak

(North Caucasus Federal University, Stavropol, Russian Federation)

Socio-philosophical analysis of the transformation of social practices in the process of digitalization of society

The article considers the processes of digitalization manifested in almost all spheres of modern life, which, one way or another, lead to a change in supra-individual social practices. It is argued that individual social practices are understood as a set of actions and interactions carried out collectively, at the level of communities, organizations and society as a whole. Digitalization, as a complex phenomenon that includes both technological and social aspects, significantly affects the spatial, temporal and communicative characteristics of these practices.

Key words: digitalization, social networks, society, personality, education, professional activities, politics, social interactions.

September 11, 2024
