Systemic crisis of the global world: continuing the discourse on overcoming it.

The fundamental causes and origins of the systemic crisis of the global world are considered as one of the most relevant topics of scientific discourse and ways to overcome it. It is argued that, according to the apologists of man-made civilization, the way out of the crisis lies on the way to further improve the technological equipment of man. We are talking about the increasing pace of development and change of technological maps, as well as, often, the forcible introduction of Western socio-cultural projects corresponding to them. It is shown that the way out of the impasse that has engulfed the world of crisis is seen only through culture, namely, through the change of its value orientations and imperatives.

Key words: civilization, culture, crisis, values, traditions.
