The concept of time in crisis recovery models

The article discusses models of crisis recovery in time projection. The author proceeds from the fact that crisis is not a static, but a dynamic formation, therefore time acts as a form of its existence. It is shown that the bases for various forms and ways out of the crisis are the past, present and future, the orientation of which is illustrated by actual historical material.

Key words: time, crisis consciousness, past, present, future, crisis.
