Creating the future: nonprofit organizations as a tool for social transformations

The article explores the socio-philosophical aspects of the formation and functioning of the non-profit sector in Russia, its role in modernizing social relations, and addressing pressing social issues. It emphasizes the importance of non-profit organizations as a tool for civic engagement, a platform for dialogue between diverse social groups, and a catalyst for social innovation. Using the example of the Kabardino-Balkarian Regional Public Organization “Youth Intellectual Club ‘I-Club’”, the article analyzes successful social projects aimed at supporting families, preventing internet addiction, fostering youth development, and assisting vulnerable groups. These projects demonstrate the effectiveness of non-profit organizations in addressing both local and global challenges.

Key words: non-governmental organizations, civil society, social issues, family values, internet addiction, youth projects, partnership with the state.
