Cultural and philosophical foundations of the ideology of Russia's economic modernization in the context of ensuring its national security

The cultural and philosophical foundations of the ideology of Russia's economic modernization in the context of ensuring its national security are presented. It is concluded that the ideology of modern domestic modernization presupposes the concept of economic diversification. It is shown that it represents a form of modernization development that is most relevant to the trans-historical value constants of Russia, formed as a result of the historical development of our Fatherland. These include the following axiological imperatives: Russia's independence in relation to the West and East as civilizational types; Messianism as an orientation towards ridding the cultures of the West and East of their inherent negative attributes; orientation towards justice as a value that occupies a place above happiness and well-being in the Russian axiological hierarchy; ethicism and ideocracy as the realization by the authorities of the sacred meaning of national genesis.

Key words: culture, economy, ideology, diversification, modernization, justice, statism.
