The philosophical and anthropological dimension of man in the mythological worldview

Man is considered in the mythological picture of the world. It is emphasized that for centuries the myth has served as the foundation for an autonomous, value-based organization of the universe, being perceived not as a reflection of reality, but as a created construct providing an individual with guidelines for decision-making in critical circumstances. It is noted that the mythological thinking inherited from the ancestors still influences the people of the 21st century.

Key words: worldview, mythological worldview, personality, man.
