National ideology as an axiological basis of the culture of national security

National ideology is explicated as an axiological basis of the culture of national security. It is shown that national ideology is a political adaptation of the value constants of the nation to the specific conditions of their implementation, being the most important aspect of the culture of national security. It is concluded that in this context, ideology is a form of reflection at the theoretical level of public consciousness of value determinants that make up the axiological matrix of the nation, relevant to ensuring the implementation of national interests as forms of concretization and actualization of this matrix adequate to existence.

Key words: axiology, national ideology, culture of national security, nation, values, constants.
