The impact of migration on social transformations

Migration is considered as a leading factor in the transformation of social structures. It is shown that it is an object of social reality, manifesting itself in three forms (process, phenomenon, social institution). It is argued that being an integral part of any society, it has a certain influence on it. This becomes possible due to the clash of norms, rules and forms of behavior of different societies. At the same time, the implemented social practices gain significance.

Key words: migration, social structure, influence, consequences, conflict, transformations, migration policy.
